

About me...

- I am passionate about delivering person-centred, strengths-based and high-quality advice to CYP, families and schools.
- I value early intervention as a key component for awareness, empowerment and positive change.
- I have particular interest in neurodiversity and supervision.

What is important to me...

- How I communicate with children/young people and adults I work with. I believe understanding how best to communicate with each other is a key component to effective communication and collaboration.
- Respecting other people's voice, views and wishes, and understanding that CYP and families have their own narratives of their journeys/experiences.
- Working collaboratively so we can create positive change.
- Focussing on early intervention so CYP, families and schools have access to timely support.

Supporting me at work...

- I can take some time to process verbal information, so I appreciate being given time to process and respond.
- I am very reflective, so I appreciate having the space and time to discuss and share ideas with others.
- I am a keen learner and enjoy finding out about different ways of working creatively.
